

The Global TV Deck

Direct-to-consumer brands' and global tech firms' investments in TV advertising

October 2021

Data-driven, outcomes-obsessed 'direct-to-consumer' and major technology companies represent the fastest growing, most successful brands and are also some of the biggest TV spenders globally

Direct-to-Consumer: a company that sells their product or service directly online to end customers without involving third-party retailers, wholesalers or other parts of the traditional consumer supply chain

"TV continues to outperform most of our other marketing opportunities on a dollar-for-dollar basis so it's great for the brand and it's great for the bottom line. We've loved television and we continue to love it."

John Foley - Founder & CEO, Peloton

"There are more and more DTC brands which start advertising on TV, with high budgets - not only in the US, but also here (in Germany). This trust is no coincidence: On the one hand, a mere look at the performance of the advertised products confirms that TV advertising is clearly paying off. On the other hand, numerous studies confirm the high effectiveness of TV."

Malte Hildebrandt - Managing Director, Screenforce

"There was a really big opportunity to invest in our brand more broadly and we know that TV drives that broader reach that it's difficult for us to get with more targeted audiences on social."

Charlotte Langley - VP Brand & Communications, Bloom & Wild

The DTC TV ad spend is steadily growing

'Direct-to-consumer' are among the fastest-growing brands, driven by their innovative connection to consumers and the way they approach media

DTC brands build themselves around the needs of the modern consumer

How Are DTC Brands Attracting Consumers?

Deliver On A Specific Consumer Need

Ensure That Their Products Are Designed & Executed Well

Offer Their Product At A Fair Price

Take Pride In Excellent Customer Service / Experience

Simplify The Buying / Returning / Exchanging Process

Successful DTC brands adhere to a core set of principles that are shaped to fit today's consumer behaviours, lifestyles and values

With data science as a core competency, most DTC companies rely on data & analytics for their media decision-making

Performance is their currency and DTC companies know exactly what media works for growing and perhaps, more importantly, retaining their customer base

DTC's top KPIs are focused on growth metrics like sales, customer acquisition, conversion rates and website traffic

Through their own analytics, these brands can quickly 'test & learn' how their media placements (and creative content) are performing and their agility allows them to react / optimize swiftly and scale up when necessary

Major tech companies are spending big on TV

The 'Tech Giants,' commonly referred to by the acronym FAAAM (Facebook, Alphabet / Google, Amazon, Apple, Microsoft), have become nearly ubiquitous in societies across the globe. This is especially true during the pandemic, as many offer goods or services that have taken on heightened importance and relevance to our everyday lives.

Despite their deep pockets and big names, these brands must overcome many of the same challenges other brands commonly face: threats to their Share of Voice (SOV), competition from category challengers, need to support new product launches and the urgency to quickly pivot and meet a new set of consumer needs fostered by the pandemic.

Much like the 'direct-to-consumer' category, these data-driven, outcomes-obsessed brands are going big in TV to drive continued business growth.
